

Henry Does a Kellermann, Gives a False Address, and Peeves the Duke of Essex

For Henry Is No Swell Riverside Driver at All and the Essex Market Bunch Suspects He's a Masquerading East Sider Who Took a Cold Plunge Into the Drink when the Steam Was Turned Off, and They're All Sore.

By Roger Batchelder.

ESSEX MARKET COURT stroked its chin and frowned.

"It's the usual," said Bill Belms, powerless President and finger-printer, as he looked at the final edition of The Evening World and sighed.

"Here was a chance," put in Pete Walker, "for the best story from the grand old Temple of Justice in a month, and Henry Smithers had to go and desert. Appalling, I call it."

Henry Smithers wasn't exactly his name, but it was almost.

And, according to the verdict of the court, Henry is none other than a certain Henry well known in the district.
When he was arrested he went and gave his address as No. 224 West 89th Street, "way up with the Riverside Drive swells like Joe Levy, the Duke of Essex Street, who is reputed to be shaved every other day by a Jap named Ray."

The Essex Market bunch again grounded as they heard the evidence.
"We gotta get the story across some way," put in Warrant Officer Murphy.
"This had come from our district and gave his address up."

No here is the story.
Yesterday afternoon, as the ferryboat Gochen departed for New Jersey and other unknown points, Henry Smithers arrived at the 224 Street dock. Everybody thought that he was a commutator who had left the office early and was going to Chrome, N. J., or something like that.

Henry stood at the dock for a moment and regarded the departing tub, which was making its usual tracks for the other side of the river. Then he said, "Adios, old world," and executed an admirable Annette Kellern-mann into the icy waters. Henry found the water cold. No one had turned on the steam heat. He started to swim; at least, when several men put out in a rowboat Henry was still on top of aqua pura and wiggling just like a fish.

With the adroit use of a marin-spike, or whatever sailors use to rescue sinking people with, Henry was pulled to the shore. Several cops who happened to be nearby had to go and interfere with the party. They asked Henry where he lived and why he had joined the North River Polar Bear Club.

CLUBMEN WAITERS SERVE EMPLOYEES

Waiters, Porters and Bell Boys Find Their Duties Being Performed by Members.

CHICAGO, Dec. 30.—Employees of the Chicago Automobile Club traded places with the members last night and were guests of honor at a party and dinner given as recognition of their faithful service during the year.

Waiters, porters, bus boys, bell boys and other employees found on their arrival at the club that a prominent contractor was the doorman, while they rode up in an elevator operated by the advertising manager of a large steel corporation, and their hats and coats were checked at a booth by the Vice President of the club.

The employees also played some pranks, such as giving a cent tip to their employers and making the "bell boys" carry suitcases filled with bricks to the top floor.

"I live at 224 West 89th Street," said Henry.

"But you did not jump into the river," inquired a cop with garden pipe.

"I did it because I went home and my wife looked insulting," said Henry.
"She might as well have said, 'You're a fool.'"

"It's colder in the water," volunteered an old salt from Newark annually.
"Perhaps," admitted Henry with a shiver.

For the rest of the afternoon, reporters were trying to locate Henry's wife and get the whole story. Several who appeared at the 89th Street apartment were assisted to the door with the information that Henry didn't hang his straw hat there; in fact the indignant elevator man whose front hall was somewhat tracked with dripping shoes declared that he had never heard of Henry.

"That settles it," said Court Officer Jerry Creedon. "Henry comes from among us."

"But," suggested Clerk Rink, "maybe Henry wasn't married; perhaps his girl fared him out."

grounded as they heard the evidence.
"We gotta get the story across some
way," put in Warrant Officer Murphy.
"This had come from our district
and gave his address up."

CONDEMNED MAN ESCAPES.

Had Been Locked in Cell but Gets Out in Disguise.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 29.—(Am-tel Press.) A man, under sentence of death on Jan. 3 next for the murder of Policeman Thomas Zolty, in this city on Nov. 12 last, escaped from the Newcastle County Jail, which is at Greenbank Lake yesterday, disguised as a farmer, carrying a bag of clothes.

A reward of $100 was offered for his capture by the trustees of the workhouse, who are at a loss to explain his escape, he having been locked in his cell a short time before.

Resolved—

Monroe Clothes for All Time

More New Year's Eve parties will celebrate "At Home" this year than ever—and as a result we are breaking all records selling Monroe Evening Clothes.

And just a word about Evening Clothes. The ordinary clothier neglects this very important department—and not only doesn't keep abreast with style changes but looks upon his infrequent call for Dress Clothes as an opportunity to pay the day's expense from the profit of the one sale.

Monroe Evening Clothes are a very big factor of our enormous business. We stock all sizes—Regulars—Stouts—Shorts and Slims—in both Tuxedos and Full Dress Suits—and because we sell them at the same small profit margin as all other Monroe Clothes—we sell more Evening Clothes than most clothiers sell altogether.

Come up to Monroe Shops for your Evening Clothes—and on New Year's Eve you'll be one of the admired instead of admiring the other fellow—and then, when you make your usual New Year's resolution (which will remain unbroken this year, willy-nilly), also resolve that hereafter you'll continue saving money by buying all your clothes at Monroe Shops
